

Helena Compton started drawing portraits in her teens, progressing from pencil to coloured pencils. People and animals are still her favourite subject but around 2011 she started doodling with gel pens. She realised she had been doing that all her life, but just with a pen, and then discarding the finished picture.

She joined Pam's art class in 2011. Previously, when she had attended a class that Pam ran, Pam taught her to paint, blending the colours. She only did a few paintings like this because of the hours of trying to recreate the same colours as the previous session and trying to get a painting to be "perfect". That's why any paintings she now does are quick abstracts! She's done acrylics, oils and pastels.
